

Dear Colleague

Emergency medicine is a rapidly developing, dynamic and innovative discipline. The emergency doctors proved in the last years that they can be on the front side fighting a pandemic disease as well as working in a small unit or working near a football field. Its potential for adapting newly developed technologies to medical practice and expanding its working areas is fascinating. I, as a doctor in the busiest department of any hospital, want to be a part of this rapidly changing discipline, interacting with colleagues throughout the Europe and share their experiences. Helping in EUSEM's organizational team will help me expand my vision and also i will be able to guide my peers with my own abilities, which i gained working in one of the most crowded hospitals in Turkey.

My interests in data processing, biostatistics and innovation has kept me continuing my education. Sharing and developing my knowledge in this area can be helpful for the profession of emergency medicine or in establishing teams that can work on innovation. In addition to this, i have traits of leadership and capability of managing problems, which i proved in organizing medical congresses and these can aid me overcoming organizational problems. My communication skills and use of social media actively will help me spread the objectives of EUSEM.

In conclusion, joining the EUSEM team will not only benefit me getting experience, but also i will be working actively for my colleagues and profession. Working with this organization was my dream since i started as a resident and i would like to use all my abilities as co-chair.

Best Regards
